

Surveyed executives reported rising demand for technological and advanced cognitive skills, relative to their share in today's workforce.

Skills<sup>1</sup> of today vs skills of tomorrow in Europe<sup>2</sup> and the US, %

Note: Exhibit does not include fine motor skills, inspecting and monitoring, or quantitative and statistical skills. Axes represent median of corresponding data points.

<sup>1</sup>Skills descriptions were shortened. <sup>2</sup>Includes France, Germany, Italy, and UK. <sup>3</sup>Question: What are the most widely used workforce skills in your organization today?

<sup>4</sup>Difference between % of survey respondents who expect to need a skill more and % of survey respondents who expect to need it less. Question: How do you anticipate the skill needs of your workforce will evolve driven by AI-related technologies adoption in your organization within the next 6 years?

Source: McKinsey Global Institute survey, 2024, n = 1,128 C-level executives (305 from US, 213 from Germany, 209 from UK, 201 from Italy, and 200 from France)